[illegible]

Palestine had been a fertile, long-settled land sacred to the three Abrahamic religions when the World Zionist Organization determined at the turn of the 20th century to transform this land into a Jewish state. Since the 7th century Arab conquest Palestine had been largely Muslim, with significant Christian and very small Jewish minorities. As described by Israeli historian Shlomo Sand, this population was descended from the original Canaanite, Jewish, and numerous other ethnic populations which preceded them during the hegemony of 17 different large and small empires holding successive dominance over a period of 5,000 years.

To assess the suitability of Palestine for a Jewish state, the WZO dispatched two Swiss rabbis to visit and evaluate Palestine. They reported back in a coded message, "The bride is beautiful but she's already married." It was apparent that they would have to share the land or expel the indigenous Arab population. They decided on the latter course. This began with establishment in 1901 of the Jewish National Fund, using monies from wealthy international donors and contributions raised from the Jewish diaspora to purchase land in Palestine that would be reserved for exclusive Jewish ownership, use and employment, displacing Arab tenants and employees. As this progressed, the Arabs became aware of the Zionist agenda and conflict increased. Even so, the population of Palestine was only 10% Jewish at the end of WWI and the beginning of British administration under its mandate from the League of Nations.

The conflict was fueled by British facilitation of Jewish immigration during the mandate. Britain had promised Arabs sovereign countries in exchange for their help defeating the Ottomans under the command of Col. T.E. Lawrence, but later, anticipating defeat by Germany, Britain provided the WZO with the Balfour Declaration pledging establishment of a homeland for Jews in Palestine in exchange for Jewish support of their war effort. This included loans and the all-important entry of America into the war through political influence by the Zionist Organization of America.

Arab anger against the British policy erupted in 1936 and continued through 1939. The British brutally repressed and disarmed the Arab rebellion, but decided to cap Jewish citizenship at about one-third of the Palestinian population. At this point three well-established underground Zionist militias – the Hagana, Irgun, and Lehi (aka Stern Gang) – launched a campaign of terrorism against the British. During WWII one of these – the Lehi – offered alliance with the Germans to drive out the British, and the WZO invited collaboration with Hitler to force European Jews into Palestine. Anti-British terrorism in Palestine resumed after WWII, including a bombing of British headquarters in Jerusalem's King David Hotel, and the embattled British declared their intention to leave Palestine in the hands of the recently established United Nations in May 1948.

Under heavy Zionist and U.S. pressure with behind-the-scenes bribes and arm-twisting, the UN General Assembly adopted the recommendation of a Special Committee on Palestine (with no Arab representation) to partition Palestine into two states, one 55% Jewish and one 45% Arab, despite an Arab population twice the Jewish population and 94% Arab land ownership. This violated the principle of self-determination enshrined in Article 55 of the UN Charter, and was understandably rejected by the Arabs. In March 1948 the UN Security Council also rejected this plan and the U.S. recommended UN trusteeship, whereupon the Zionist terror groups launched a carefully prepared ethnic cleansing plan to seize Palestine by force.

By mid-May when the British vacated Palestine, Zionist terrorism had already expelled over 300,000 Palestinians driven into 59 hastily constructed UN refugee camps which still operate today. Arab forces then intervened with too little too late, with the only credible Arab army – the Arab Legion of Transjordan – collaborating with the Zionists in an agreement to keep the West Bank in exchange for non-interference elsewhere. By the January 1949 armistice, the Zionists had committed 33 massacres terrorizing over ¾ million largely defenseless Muslim and Christian Palestinians (previously disarmed by the British) into flight, seizing or destroying 530 villages and 11 urban centers. In defiance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, UN Resolution 194, and Israel's own pledge for 1949 UN admission, these refugees have been refused their right of return.

This mass expulsion, known by Palestinians as Al-Nakba (the catastrophe), has remained an uncorrected and continuing injustice through the 1967 Naksa when another quarter million Palestinians were displaced, and the bulldozing of over 25,000 Palestinian homes since then during a brutal occupation, blockade, and other relentless human rights abuses and violations of international law by Israel (see www.al-nakba-history.com).
